end sex trafficking

Hi, I'm Melinda,

Human trafficking. It was the kind of topic to be included with fascist dictatorships, genocide, and starving children. All human atrocities almost incomprehensible. All deserving of righteous indignation. A stomping of the foot. A sense that someone really needs to get on this! But, at least it's happening on the other side of the world or some remote third world country, right? Wait...what? Here in Stanislaus County? Hmmm. Well then, these must be the children with no supervision. You know, the ones in troubled areas of town.

I am writing this to shatter that myth. You see, my daughter was a victim of human trafficking. And right here in Stanislaus County. Right under my nose. I was lulled into the belief it didn't happen here; it didn't happen in my upper middle class, white neighborhood. It would never happen to my child. She attended the best schools, she went to church, there were no drugs or alcohol in my home, and I was an attentive parent! But still it happened, with all the swiftness and mind-numbing terror of the apocalypse. The ripple effect of the shame and isolation of it, wave after wave, slapped up against my soul, eroding my family and everything I thought I knew. But I found out there was much I didn't know after all.

I didn't know human trafficking waits like a crouching beast at every bus stop, high school, shopping mall, park, and sporting field to gobble up our precious future, our children. It slithers in on Facebook and YouTube. It twists the mind through music videos and commercials. Sex and glamour with no real effort, not like school and chores, can be easily attained with promises of love, connection and value. We adults...we know better.

But they don't. Life is hard. Peer and social pressure relentless. The victims are chosen carefully, targeted with precision, and reeled in ever so very slowly, with finesse and mastery, then SLAM, the cage door shuts, and the child you thought you knew so well slowly morphs into a completely different person. Because for that child now, life is different. It is now all about survival. Real Life Survival with Real Life Consequences.

I did notice the change in my daughter and became increasingly desperate for outside assistance. Desperate is such a pale word for all the parental emotions that rush in.

By God's grace, I found the resources for me and for my daughter, but it is far from a quick fix.

Debbie Johnson and Without Permission have been pivotal to my daughter's mental, spiritual and physical survival. And also my own. My daughter receives care from the highly trained Navigators, bonding with other survivors her age and receiving the motivation to fight the good fight. As a parent, I have greatly benefited from the weekly support of the Parent Participation support group, meeting other parents like myself, working on our shame. One cannot be resuscitated from this hell without desiring to give back. I know first hand how over time, the shame can be replaced by the joy of giving back and making a positive impact in someone else's life. As a parent, one's self esteem is crushed by feelings of failure, accurate or not. But giving back restores one's sense of self worth, plus enables an organization to do what it does the best, saving families in hopes this will never again touch someone else's life.

Listed in this resource guide are agencies that will help in the journey towards healing, and/or provide you with important information on how you can get involved.

The trafficking did not take place overnight, and neither will the healing. It will be a process. But here are the organizations and resources that will stand with you shoulder to shoulder in the fight to reclaim your child's soul, which is who she or he was born to be, before they were introduced to the horrors of trafficking.

It will take a partnership or a village to slowly make your child whole again.

We cannot accept denial. Our precious children are being stolen from out from under us. It is time to draw a line in the sand, and shout "No more!"

The organizations are in constant need of volunteers. They are understaffed. They are up late and rise early, tending to those in need. You may have only heard of one particular organization, during their main fundraising event, but the need is immense. They often rely solely on donations. Traffickers work 24/7 and so we need to as well.

Hopefully this guide will be used to encourage and motivate those of us who want to do something, who are ready to roll up our sleeves, get a little messy, and make a difference in the future of our children by volunteering and donating to these places on the front lines daily fighting this atrocity.

Please stand with us in the fight against this evil.

The Information In This Guide

We have tried to be as faithful as we could with the information presented in this guide. If one spent the months of time digging deep enough, one would find that the information is publically available through websites, newsletters, press releases, phone call responses, email replies, surveys and personal experiences.

Our contribution to you is to save you the hundreds of hours of research, including the three years of volunteering and donation that it took to gather it.

You are welcome!

We have also tried hard NOT to include information that would compromise any of the organizations in any way, and especially the safety of the clients they serve.

For example, items like addresses or number of human trafficking clients they serve was not included if the organization specifically did not want it disclosed.

We have no doubt that some parts of the information has or will change because of the nature of human trafficking organizations always seem to be changing due to staff turnover, an increase or decrease in grant funding, or even changes in organizational vision and focus.

Regardless, I know that for any of you who genuinely want to get involved and make a difference, this information will give you a big head start!

As stated previously, this information is publically available.

Volunteering at Human Trafficking Organizations

Volunteering at human trafficking organizations can be a very positive experience. Some, however, have shared challenges they have had. We wanted to share some of the lessons we have learned in hopes others can have the best experience possible.

Listen, you SHOULD volunteer! We don't think you will ever regret it especially if you know what you're getting into. Very few nonprofits have an excessive budget for staffing, so they rely heavily on volunteers. But you should know there may be some challenges in the process.

If you're volunteering with a one-off group, you may not need to go through the background check process. If you do need a background check, here is what it might look like:

First, keep in mind that it may take some time to process your application. Some shelters may require an extensive background check that will take some time. It can cost the nonprofit between $17 and $50 to do this background check on you. The nonprofit may cover it, but a donation would be appreciated.

If the shelter works with children, a Department of Public Safety Fingerprint Clearance Card may be needed.

It sounds scarier than it is and may cost the nonprofit around $70. If you have the means to pay for it, please either pay for it outright or give them a donation.

The Fingerprint Clearance Card will be yours to keep and will go with you long after you volunteer with that nonprofit.

Again, plan on the volunteer application and approval process taking some time. This is not the nonprofit being slow or rude. Most of the time they have grants, permits or legal requirements they have to conform to when it comes to volunteers. It could be a 4 to 6 week process of background checks and state required mandatory trainings before the volunteers even set foot in the building. Please don't take it personally. It's just part of the process.

Here's what I suggest you do while you're waiting on the application process. While waiting for the background check or fingerprint clearance, sign up for the organization's newsletter, make a small donation, go on a tour, attend an open house, go to a gala or fundraiser, do some research or follow, comment and like their postings on Facebook. You will learn a lot, and you'll be even more informed when you do start. Cleaning out one of your closets a week before volunteering enables you to bring bags of clothes the first day. You can be pretty popular your first day!

Once you get the green light, celebrate! You deserve it and you have crossed a threshold that few others have! You've made it through the long and (occasionally) daunting process of applying to volunteer with a nonprofit that serves human trafficking survivors.

If you see something, say something! Human Trafficking Hotline: 888-3737-888

The nonprofit will most likely have some type of orientation, shadowing day, or training event.

As you begin volunteering, here is a checklist of things that will help you in your first days.

1. Know that safety comes first.

There are a few health and safety precautions one should always take when volunteering at a nonprofit that serves human trafficking survivors

While most won't require inoculations for communicable diseases, some will ask for a TB test or in rare cases, may ask for a physical. If you will be working around donations, I suggest you wear closed-toed shoes, preferably ones that are comfortable, as you will likely be on your feet a lot. Tie your hair back, wear a headscarf/ bandana, be ready to wear a hairnet if you are working in their kitchen. Be prepared to wear food-service gloves if you are working with food and remove your rings. Some nonprofits will have strict dress codes. It is best to plan to simplify your attire, at least at first.

Wash your hands and use hand sanitizer before and after your shift. Most importantly, do not go if you are sick. Many clients are very vulnerable to germs and diseases. Even little colds could have an impact on them. For your own health's sake, bulk up on vitamins.

2. Remember you are not in charge

Show up wanting to know how you can help and be flexible. A supervisor once stated, "Blessed are the flexible, for they shall not be bent out of shape." It was some of the best advice I ever received. This doesn't mean you won't eventually work into a more desirable or specialized role, but be patient with the process. You may head up your own company or have decades of experience in your personal or professional life, but this is not your operation to run. Helping out could mean many things, so be open.

You may be tasked with office work, wake-up duty, opening boxes, sorting produce, organizing, washing or cleaning besides actually working directly with the clients. Be humble and don't try to run the show. It helps to have a "no task is beneath me" attitude.

The nonprofit may also have rules about giving gifts to clients, letting clients use your phone, transporting them in your car, taking pictures of them or with them, holding their babies, or even hugging them. Some of these rules may sound silly or restrictive but realize it is for your safety and the safety of the client. Some clients in human trafficking shelters are on the run from some pretty bad characters and a post on social media could be all the trafficker needs to locate him or her.

Respect the rules and realize there is usually a historical reason, and it is usually due to safety.

3. Consider the many ways to give.

Maybe you can't make it to volunteer in person. That is perfectly fine. Some nonprofits will have advocacy work for you to do from home.

Remotely taking phone calls, answering emails, making social media posts or something similar is actually important to nonprofits. You can also donate money or in-kind goods to the nonprofit, as well as organize a fund or donation drive at your work or school.

4. Go when you are really needed

Nonprofits usually get inundated with volunteer help during the holidays, especially Thanksgiving and Christmas.

It is great to help out then, but honestly, they need even more help all of the other days of the year. Offer to help out with birthday parties, graduations, baby showers. You will really be able to give and feel the love on these other days too.

While you are at it, consider making a personal or stated length of time commitment. People who run the nonprofits really appreciate volunteers who know how things work and can get started right when they show up.

Consistency is key, especially in nonprofits who serve human trafficking survivors. As tempting as it is to overcommit, please don't do it unless you really can come through. Start slow and grow into your new role over time.

5. Measure your success and effectiveness carefully.

Don't expect to see outward signs of gratitude or even to be thanked right away. Most of the clients are dealing with severe trauma and it can take months or years for them to get "out of their own head".

Remember that you are not there to make yourself feel better; you are there to help human trafficking survivors who are in very challenging circumstances. This may feel a little emotionally rough at times, but ultimately this kind of work is very rewarding. When faced with a need this great, it is always better to roll up your sleeves and pitch in than to look away. We are just going to say it: be prepared for cursing, spitting, pushing, yelling, backstabbing, screaming, and other forms of outburst that are completely understandable and to be expected from teenagers with trauma.

This is ESPECIALLY true for teenage girls who have severe and complex trauma. Even among the young adult shelters, some of the clients have arrested development, meaning that the young women essentially stopped developing their emotion regulation and coping skills at the age when the trauma and abuse first began. So if a 20 year-old's abuse and trauma started when she was 12 years old, she may react to certain situations like a 12 year-old.

You may occasionally take bad days home with you, but please don't take it personally. You may never see any of this at the nonprofit you volunteer with, but if you do, don't be surprised.

I have found that it is really not a commentary on the nonprofit but rather on the level of trauma that their clients are going through. I have found that, in general, the younger the human trafficking survivor is, the harder it is to work with them. There may be more trauma-induced outbursts you will face. Human trafficking survivors who are older or who have babies are generally a little easier because the abuse isn't as recent, and they have at least started down the path toward healing.

6. Leave your pity at the door.

Don't come with the attitude that you are more privileged than the trafficked survivors you are working with. You are there to be of service to them and to help them, which is a very different approach. Remember, pity is felt towards another person, but compassion is felt with them.

Share a smile and welcoming words. Listen to their stories. Keep in mind that not everyone who falls victim to human trafficking is or was homeless, or had a bad life before being trafficked. Some clients came from good families, but they now need the intensive care the nonprofit offers.

7. Consider going with a friend.

You may want to go with a friend, especially the first time when first coming face-to-face with a human trafficking survivor. It is not something you are used to. The challenge with helping those in need is to be open to them without being overwhelmed by the suffering you might encounter while doing so. Having a friend to process your experience with will not only help in sorting through the experience, but it will also help you both to be more open, stronger, and of service whenever and wherever you encounter the need.

Making commitments as a team together will also help if you are not able to make it to one of your scheduled times. Remember that consistency is key with human trafficking survivors.

8. Compassion fatigue, burnout and secondary stress may happen.

Volunteering at human trafficking shelters can be both the most difficult and the most rewarding thing you may ever do. Compassion fatigue, or secondary traumatic stress, is the emotional stress that results when you hear about the firsthand trauma experiences of human trafficking survivors. Yes, you will be changed by the experience.

You may not even recognize you have a form of the stress, but symptoms often include a combination of mental, behavioral, emotional and physical signs. It may feel like you are abnormally short-tempered, stressed or emotionally unsettled. It may also involve a spiritual component such as questioning meaning or loss of faith. Just be prepared and realize that you might experience a variety of stress responses. By realizing this, you will be able to recognize it if it happens, and know what it is.

16 Keys to Staying Mentally And Emotionally Healthy:

- Life balance- Work to establish and maintain a diversity of interests, activities and relationships.
- Relaxation techniques- Ensure downtime by practicing meditation or some other form of relaxation.
- Contact with nature- Garden or hike to remain connected and grounded to the moment can help maintain perspective.
- Creative expression- Drawing, cooking, gardening or photography expand emotional experiences.
- Assertiveness training- Learn to be able to say “no” and set limits when necessary.
- Interpersonal communication skills- Improve written and verbal communication to enhance social and professional support.
- Cognitive restructuring- Regularly evaluate experiences and apply problem-solving techniques to challenges.
- Time management- Set priorities and remain productive and effective.
- Plan for coping- Determine skills and strategies to adopt when signs of compassion fatigue begin to surface.
- Focus on self-care- Making a healthy diet, exercise and regular sleep priorities reduces adverse effects of stress.
- Journal- Writing about feelings related to helping or care giving can reduce stress and create meaning out of negative experiences.
- Seek professional support- Working with a counselor who specializes in trauma to process distressing symptoms provides additional perspectives and ideas.
- Join a support group- Talking through experiences and coping strategies with others who have similar circumstances can enhance optimism and hope.
- Learn new self-care strategies- Adopting a new stress management techniques such as yoga or progressive muscle relaxation can reduce adverse physical stress symptoms.
- Ask for help- Asking social supports or co-workers to assist with tasks can hasten healing.
- Recognize success and create meaning- Identifying aspects of helping that have been positive and important to others assists with resolving trauma and distress.

Again, you SHOULD volunteer.

Being a part of someone's journey of healing and restoration is one of the most fulfilling things you'll experience.

“Survivors have needed everything from clothes, teeth pulled, a social security card, a car seat, to a place to live.”

Donating To Human Trafficking Organizations

Perhaps the only thing recommended more than volunteering at a nonprofit is DONATING to one.

A nonprofit is never wasteful with the funds they have. If anything, they stretch things farther than ever imagined.

It is a good investment. Most of the money given actually does go to help the clients directly. There is usually a good tax benefit so take advantage of it. However, before you can donate to a nonprofit you need to choose one!

It is recommended to check out a nonprofit's profile on GuideStar. There will be their mission statement, how long they have been around, their financials, and their general standing as a nonprofit.

Here are 10 tips from GuideStar on what to look for in donating to a nonprofit:

1. Researching Charities

- Clarify your values. Do this before you open your checkbook, volunteer your time or look at that letter from a charity.

2. Identify your preferences

- Ask yourself what is important. Human trafficking? Education? Hunger? Helping sick children?

3. Search the GuideStar database

- Find charities that meet your criteria.
- Check out the other details offered by GuideStar.

4. Focus on the mission

- Look at each charity's description in the GuideStar search results, on its Website or in its literature.
- Find the nonprofit that fits best with your values.

5. Eliminate organization that don't meet your criteria

- Now you are ready to look more closely at these organizations.

6. Check a charity's legitimacy

- If a nonprofit is found on GuideStar with the Basic Search, you know the IRS recognizes the organization as tax exempt. GuideStar Premium and GuideStar Pro include information on defunct organizations, but those profiles are clearly marked.
 - If the charity is not on GuideStar, ask to see its letter of determination.
 - If the organization is faith-based, ask to see its official listing in a directory for its denomination.

If you see something, say something! Human Trafficking Hotline: 888-3737-888

7. Get the cold, hard facts. A reputable organization will:

- Define its mission and programs clearly.
- Have measurable goals.
- Use concrete criteria to describe its achievements.

8. Avoid charities that will not share information or will pressure you.Reputable nonprofits:

- Will discuss their programs and finances.
- Don't use pressure tactics.
- Are willing to send literature about their work.
- Will take "no" for an answer.

9. Compare apples to apples.

• Be sure to compare charities that do the same kind of work, especially if you are looking at their finances. The type of work a charity does can affect its operating costs dramatically.

10. Trust your instincts.

• If you still have doubts about a charity, then don't contribute to it. Instead, find another nonprofit that does the same kind of work and with which you feel comfortable. Then make your donation.

When you are ready to give to a nonprofit, there are ways you can do so, beyond just hitting the Donate button.

Here are 7 Alternative Ideas for Donating to a Nonprofit that I found on one of the nonprofit's websites:

1. Make a Cash Contribution

Charities are more than happy to take cash contributions from donors. If you are looking for a no fuss way to reduce your tax liability, while also supporting your favorite charity, consider simply writing a check to the nonprofit organization of your choice. You can designate how the funds are to be used, or make a no strings attached gift that enables the group's executive director or Board of Directors to make that decision in the best interest of the organization.

2. Attend a Fundraiser

It is possible to have fun while also supporting your favorite charity. Consider buying a ticket to attend an enjoyable fundraiser event. Many nonprofits hold silent auctions, wine and food tastings, and such throughout the year. It makes sense to use your entertainment dollars to provide support for the work of important community based charities, and have a good time in the process.

3. Clean Out Your Closets and Share

There is a good chance that you have plenty of items in your closet that you will never wear again. Whether it is clothes that you have outgrown or items that you just don't wear anymore, the very items that are causing clutter in your closet could be put to good use by a nonprofit organization. Some donations are offered for sale in thrift stores operated by volunteers, while others are given to needy individuals in the community for their personal use. Contact a local charitable organization that accepts clothing items to inquire about their drop-off site.

4. Donating Household Goods

One of the ways to donate on a regular basis is by giving household goods and supplies you no longer need. If you replace your furniture and your existing furniture is in good condition, donate it. Appliances, cookware and home decor items are also acceptable donations. Many of these organizations pass these donated goods on to those who will sell the goods to the public and use the funds received as a way to fund the charity.

5. Donate Your Time and Talent

Another way to give is to donate your time and your talent. Perhaps you have legal expertise, accounting services or crafting abilities. Smaller organizations often need these services the most. Contact local organizations to find out how you can help.

6. Donate a Vehicle That You No Longer Need

Do you have an old car, boat or recreational vehicle that you no longer use? You can convert automobiles and other types of vehicles into deductions simply by giving them to qualified charitable entities. In addition to enjoying the tax benefits, you will get these large items out of your own way and reduce ownership expenses such as registration and insurance coverage fees. While not all nonprofits accept vehicle donations, there is a good chance that one or more organizations in your area would.

7. Pledge Support to a Participant in a Walk or Run Event

Many of the human trafficking nonprofit organizations hold walk or run events as a way to raise money and increase awareness of their work in the community. They recruit people to participate in the event, and participants in turn, are responsible for enlisting financial support from donors. Consider agreeing to sponsor someone who is participating in this type of fundraiser for an organization that does work that you would like to support.

A Word On Tax Deductions And Donations

Nonprofit organizations regularly receive tax breaks from the federal government because these organizations are operating on a not for profit basis. Individuals who donate to these organizations may also receive tax deductions on their federal income taxes for the donation of goods and cash. If you are a professional who donates his or her time to an organization, this may be a write off for your business, too.

To find out more about the qualifications of your charitable donations for tax benefits, contact a tax professional.

Donations of goods and cash will require a receipt from the charity documenting your gift. Whenever you donate at least $250. Or goods valued at this much in any year, be sure you have the proper documentation to support it.

Now that you are a little more informed about doing some good at a human trafficking organization, it is time to look at some options for you.

Human Trafficking Organizations Overview

To help gain a perspective of the local organizations in the Central Valley, this guide is broken into 3 categories. Some of the organizations exclusively focus on human trafficking while others have services that are integrated in their care.

For the purpose of helping you get started on volunteering or donating, both are included in this Guide.

All of the nonprofits listed here have human trafficking as part of their focus, even if it is not their exclusive focus.

The goal here is to give you a head start on volunteering or donating to some really great human trafficking organizations.

1. Housing and Shelter Organizations

These are organizations that actually take girls, boys, young men and/or women into their facilities and provide housing, shelter and healing services.

2. Service Provider Organizations

These are organizations that often support the Housing and Shelter Organizations by offering 3rd party services like case management, medical, employment services and even spiritual or development services.

3. Advocacy, Awareness and Prevention Organization

These are organizations that are geared up to provide legal advocacy, awareness and prevention programs in the community, schools or at the legislative level.

Coalition To Abolish Slavery And Trafficking

Mission Statement

Cast's mission is ending modern slavery through education, advocacy and empowering survivors of human trafficking.

Type of Human Trafficking Service

Upon intake, the CAST staff assesses for emergency needs, such as housing, clothing, food, and safety, followed by a comprehensive assessment and legal interview that also address safety. Attorneys then evaluate the legal needs and provide each client with the necessary education and information to make an informed choice about how to proceed with their case. Combined social, shelter, and legal services are what continue to set CAST apart. To date, we remain the only organization in the country that offers all three branches of services in-house. We know that victims cannot become survivors without all three—a social service advocate to ensure access to benefits and services and to provide supportive counseling, validation, and normalization; a shelter or housing program to ensure basic necessities are provided; and finally, critical legal services that assist victims in navigating complex criminal, civil, immigration, and other legal proceedings.

Motivating Inspiring Supporting & Serving Sexually Exploited Youth

Mission Statement

We envision a world without commercial sexual exploitation. Our mission is to provide supportive services to commercially sexually exploited youth and work for systemic change with the youth we serve.

Type of Human Trafficking Service

CSEC is a crisis plaguing many communities across the U.S., including the San Francisco Bay Area, where Motivating, Inspiring, Supporting, and Serving Sexually Exploited Youth (MISSEY) was founded in 2007 to respond to the needs of CSEC survivors. We provide safe space, foster healthy relationships, and manifest hope with youth who are often experiencing poverty, homelessness, abuse, systems-involvement, and complex trauma. We believe in and witness daily the brilliance and resilience of young people. With the right supports and resources available, youth have the power to transform the realities of exploitation in their lives and communities.

North Country Rape Crisis & Child Protection Center

Mission Statement

To reduce the incidence of and vulnerability to sexual assault, child abuse and human trafficking by providing education and prevention skills to community children and adults, and to alleviate the trauma experienced by survivors of these crimes by providing direct services.

Type of Human Trafficking Service

As shown in the Center's mission statement, the problems that the organization addresses are sexual assault, child abuse, and human trafficking. These issues permeate all areas of society; a person who has been victimized by one or more of these crimes has endured serious trauma, and the coping strategies that one chooses are not always healthy ones. Drug abuse, alcoholism, self-harm, and other destructive behaviors are common for survivors of trauma, which in turn affect their contributions to society and the communities they live in. The Center addresses these issues through our prevention education and intervention programs, and strives to help survivors find healthy ways of dealing with their triggers and emotional issues. It is our goal to strengthen the communities we live in, one person at a time.
